Norway Municipal Court.

Wm. F. Jones, Judge.

As the result of a hearing before Judge William F. Jones, Wednesday morning, Thomas Lanigan, for ten years a resident of Oxford, will spend the next two months in the county jail waiting for a grand jury inquiry into the charge of assault with intent to kill. James H. Glover of Oxford is the complainant and the State called five witnesses to substantiate his evidence.

The assault had its inception late in the afternoon of Monday, when Lanigan somewhat intoxicated invaded the barn of Mr. Glover and drawing an imaginary line on the floor invited the complainant to stand on one side while he stood on that on this side appearance Lanigan used any threats of physical violence. From then on things happened fast and furious and the village was kept disturbed for a space of several hours.

After Mr. Glover ignored the invitation in the barn and left his visitor in possession of the premises, Lanigan seemed dissatisfied with the situation and procuring a club, as it is alleged, called for Mr. Glover at the latter's home. It is testified by the complainant that on this occasion Lanigan used abusive language, and threatened to kill him. Snatching the club from Lanigan's hand only after he had received a blow on the wrist, Glover used the weapon on his assailant, he testifies.

Still unsatisfied Lanigan promised to get a rifle and shoot the complainant. He made good his threat so far as procuring the weapon was concerned, and when John Farris managed to discharge the gun he observed it was cooked. Lanigan then surrendered the firearm and was later arrested by Deputy Sheriff Harry D. Cole of Paris. Mr. Glover seeing Lanigan approaching with the gun telephoned for the officer while men of the village were disarming the respondent.

Merton L. Kimball, esq., appeared for the respondent at the hearing, no evidence being offered by the defence. The witnesses called by the State were: Bridge Edwards, Winfield Gammon, Carroll Curtis, George Jones and Mr. Farris. Judge Jones in binding the respondent over to the grand jury fixed the bail at $1,000.

Mr. Chapman's Gift.

Further details have been announced concerning the magnificent gift by William R. Chapman, director of the Maine Festival, and of the Rubenstein Club of New York, of a large portion of his Bethel estate to found a "Home for Musicians," somewhat similar to the MacDowell Home in Peterboro, N. H.

Mr. Chapman will deed his mountain farm, with brook, orchard and enough tillable land for producing all vegetables that may be required, together with sufficient timber land for firewood.

In addition to all this, he will give $5,000 to start the new building. The project is now in the hands of a committee, which will formulate its plans so that they may be ready for approval at the time of the Maine Festival. It is hoped that the home will be ready for dedication at the time of the fifteenth anniversary of the Festival in 1911.

The situation of the property in question, which is about three miles from Bethel station, is most beautiful. The timber is valuable and increasing in value every year, so that in this respect alone the gift is of much importance.

It will afford, beyond a doubt, an ideal resort for tired-out, nervous musicians who need rest, but who cannot afford expensive Summer resorts.

I HAVE ALL THE MATERIAL RIGHT HERE IN TOWN TO DO PLUMBING, PROMPTLY. L. M. LONGLEY, Norway, Maine.

Written for the Advertiser. In King Arthur's Time.

Twice all in good King Arthur's time, Far as the legend runs, In days of old with deeds sublime, Achieved by England's son. When women were ladies then, And knights were quick to sue, For men were men of valor, When King Arthur's reign was new. How fell we from that high estate, Nor why did duty cease to be, Or does it condescend to mate, In the human heart live on? Say 'tis not dead but but customs change While chivalry, 'tis true, We know had wider scope or range, And knights to-day whose chivalry With all others may compare. They make but little noise and stir, Nor change our daily life through, The mut of truth fell from its butt, When Arthur's reign was new.

Buckfield, Maine. LESTER E. FULLER.

The Village Merchant.

Upon the quiet village street, With slanting stoop and open door, Whose pane was mirror for display, Through which scarce shines the light of day, Behold the village country store. About the door are grouped the village Most useful for the farmer's needs; Most rakes and hoes, and axe and spade, Some kegs of nails, on which are laid A box or two of garden seeds. Long shelves of canned stuffs greet the eye, And choice meats hang from the wall; While fruits and spices, coffees, teas, And scores of other things like these, Send forth a most inviting smell. The merchant, now a man of years, Behind the counter spends each day, Or when he's not behind the counter, With slow and scrutinizing look To the village country store. Began he here when but a boy, He looks with pride around his store; No great commercial venture his, A humble honest trade it is. He seeks enough and nothing more. He never has been to foreign lands, Nor yearning his neighbor's need; In honest toil he's passed his days In giving, yet not asking praise, And served his country long and well. On Sunday he is found at church, The same receives his loving care; And in the mid-week services, With slow and scrutinizing look To the village country store. Now who successful is he? And who more worthy of a name? A statesman, prophet, bard or sage In this or any other game? Shall mere success endure him? Upon the quiet village street, A man can build his monument; No tower of stone, a simple store. An honest life and nothing more— No wealth but to be his content?

Moving to Town.

The man who has made a success of farming and plans to move to town in his declining years is, nine cases out of ten, making a false move which will bring him more dissatisfaction than pleasure. If the retired farmer has ample means to keep him in town the last of his days he can get vastly more good out of those means in the country where he has used to living and working, than in town under different conditions and among strangers. A farmer of means who wishes to retire in the country on his own farm, where he has worked all his life, can make a most successful move. With his pleasant life on earth. With his spare money he can purchase and install modern conveniences in his farm home and embellish the grounds to make them more beautiful than the city millionaire's restricted lot. The fields and the orchard and the live stock will always divert the mind into fresh and healthy channels, while the streets and narrow blocks in the town will be depressing. The retired farmer of means can be a prince in the country on his own farm and in his own farm home. The tide now seems to be turning in the other direction. Town and city people are talking of retiring in the country for their old days and many of them are doing it. This is really a better move, for the city man in the country can have more fun than the farmer in town.

Hand and Brain. There is no unskilled labor. There may be laborers in, every walk of life who perform their tasks in a bungling fashion, but that is for the task, however trivial it may seem, requires an especial fitness of brain and hand to make it seem easy and trivial. The man who pitches hay, bringing in to play every muscle of a body trained from boyhood to the work; is a skilled artisan. The man who chops down a tree, sinking the axe at each stroke up to the eye in the exact path of the preceding blow, is a workman who need not be ashamed of his craft. We talk glibly about the man who works with his hands, forgetting the fact that no real work, done as it should be, was ever accomplished by the hands alone. It takes brains to drive a team, or handle a lever, or fashion a dwelling, or much brain work was the average man left alone to his own devices, with all the machinery of modern life about, he would be helpless. We are each skilled in a few things; but because they appear easy to us let us not make the mistake of thinking we can do the other man's job without preparation. The results will be bungling effort and disappointment.

Scorched Milk. If milk scorches—it is best to heat in a double boiler, but sometimes for haste it is set immediately over the fire—lift the saucepan off the fire and set it in a tub of cold water until the milk in the saucepan is cool; then pour off the milk keeping back the scorched part clinging to the bottom of the saucepan. The same method will be found effective in the scorching of vegetables, meats and all articles of food.

Pork Hash—Cut salt pork or bacon into small dice, and while frying it over a slow fire, on a hot griddle, add onions into thin slices; put them in with the pork and cover the frying pan and cook for ten minutes or more, occasionally stirring.

Regeneration.

On the first of January he resolved he would be very kind and good thenceforth to Mary, who for years had been his wife. He would not be soft or sappy, but as a good hearted chap he would do more to make her happy and to bless their married life.

He had always loved her greatly, but had shown it to so sedately, and he had been thickening lately of the many little ways, in which he might show affection, and while he would pass inspection, yet he knew that some correction would eventually be made.

So at breakfast time he told her that as it was growing colder, and they both were getting older and susceptible to colds.

She must go to Hyde & Water for some fur of mink or otter, for two years since he had bought her any furs, and here were old.

He would like to get her sable and next year he might be able. He remarked upon the table and the excellence of fare.

Said the biscuit was delicious and the bacon so nutritious. "Who," he said, "is there to wish us greater blessings than we have?"

She was breathless, and she wondered if somehow he had not blundered. Could it be some strain had suffered him from reason? When he left.

She sat down quite faint and worried. He had not been speaking, hurried through his breakfast and about hurried for his car. Was he bereft.

Of his senses? She was getting very nervous from her fretting and her thoughts were all for letting Doctor Plumpers know.

For, perhaps, he needed dosing, scientific dosing, or a rest from tasking engrossing—she would tell the doctor so!

Then, while worries thickly clustered, rang the telephone and flustered as she was, somehow she mustered up the courage to reply:

And her husband's voice so cheery, said: "I've sent some flowers, Dearie, for the day is rather dreary!" And she heard him say good-by.

Which confirmed her first suspicion of his sorrowful condition, and she went about her mission of housekeeping much in fear Of his growing aberration, and her menial perturbation was beyond all consolation. When at dinner time presided on the hour, he came, and nicely groomed, he kissed her once, twice, she compelled herself to smile.

And he kept up such a chatter as he carved the roast, that she was sure what was the matter and she watched him all the while.

But she was alarmed—fear-smitten—and her cheek in terror bitten, when he told her he had written to her mother to prepare.

To come visiting with Mary, ere the end of January, and that he'd be more than very glad to have her visit there. Then he saw her cheek grown paler and he wondered what could ail her, for her color seemed to fall her and her growing fear was such.

That he rushed across and got her smelling salts and gave her water for the roses and the other and this last were quite too much.

And hysterically crying, she just wrung her hands and, lying on the couch, kept sighing.

And she cried out with decision: "John, you must see a physician, for you're in a bad condition!—All your actions are so strange!"—[Waldo Co. Herald.]

MAIN ST., NORWAY, ME.

Summer at Madison Ht.

Playing the host to 500 people - 6000

feet in the air - how Kenneth D. Swan spent his vacation.

He was official keeper of the Appalachian Mountain Club but beside the spring at the base of Mount Madison trail, in the mountains.

His guests did not arrive all at once. They came singly and in bunches, footsore, tired, hungry, straggling along from his first day at the hut late in June to his last day there at the middle of September. And as they passed up the rugged slope, not the Waldorf Astoria in all its glory was comparable in their eyes with the squat hut, built of stone, whose hospitable open door gave them a cheering glimpse of cook stove and bunks ready for use.

They could not get food, but they could get a fire and all the water they like - fresh, 41 degrees cold - and a night's shelter for as many nights - as they cared to pay 50 cents - or 35 cents

if they happened to be in the summer club members. From all parts of the United States they came, even from Florida and California. In the register at the hut they wrote their names, and often a bit of poetry. As everyone knows, a mountain trail is usually excited to the poetic pitch whenever it gets a chance to record his name at a wayside shelter.

For 72 per cent of Mr. Swan's stay on

Madison the view was shut off by clouds that is listed the world's most famous few travelers who made the moist, blind journey through mist to the hut left a pathetic protest against the handicaps nature imposed on them. "Half-way up millions of feet, I wandered when they finally were high and dry and warm

in the hot kitchen; "two-thirds up, millions of feet, millions of snow" - for it was early in the season.

Though it was a strenuous half-day from civilization by way of the trail, the hut is not out of touch with the world affairs. It has a telephone, and four miles of telephone wire link it to the Ravine house, far below. Not infrequently Mr. Swan received messages asking to search for a lost hiker, or who were believed to have missed it because no word had been received from them at the Ravine house.

Early one morning Laban Watson proprietor of the Ravine house, and the first man to cut a path up Mount Madison, telephoned Mr. Swan to look for an elderly man and his sister who had started for the summit the previous afternoon. In the night the Ravine people had noticed a flash on the side of Madison and thought the climbers had the trail and camped outdoors. This was just what had happened. Mr. Swan met the two far down the mountain, climbing cheerfully for the hut just visible through the morning mists. Were they frightened? No. They had just rolled up in blankets and slept soundly. Luckily for them it had not been a cold night.

Uproarious evenings the little stone hut has seen. Many a time its two rooms, one for men and one for the women, have been filled to overflowing.

The hut accommodates 25. It held 33 on one memorable night. There were two Germans who sang fatherland songs

at the top of their lungs in a vain effort to sing down a young American who defied them with the Marseillaise. One old-timer said the hut wasn't so full as he remembered it in the days before the 1906 addition was built. From the time the original Madison place was built in 1854 till the annex was added there were many occasions, said the old mountaineer, when he had played poker to see who should sleep on the floor and who on the table - the bunks being occupied threefold. Very often all but the table and the two beds were taken, and young Swan slept outdoors. But he preferred sleeping outdoors in fine weather.

Porcupines sometimes wandered into the kitchen, to the perturbation of the waiters and the cook. One day a porcupine intruder and buried it. Shortly afterward a veteran guide came to the hut, heard about the hedgehog, hastily dug it up, fried the liver and ate it. Porcupine liver, Mr. Swan says, is very palatable.

Ghost story telling was a favorite evenforeboding of a full crop of the leaf. However, the larvae are not so numerous as the preceding broods of the green leaf-miner, and the caterpillars are not so numerous as the caterpillars of the last year. As many as five of these tiny caterpillars have been counted on a single leaf of alfalfa, and the leaf is not injured.

The green leaf-miner is the first of the season. The first brood of the green leaf-miner is the first brood of the season. The caterpillars are not so numerous as the caterpillars of the last year. As many as five of these tiny caterpillars have been counted on a single leaf of alfalfa, and the leaf is not injured.

At the same time, the caterpillars of the leaf-miner are not so numerous as the caterpillars of the last year. As many as five of these tiny caterpillars have been counted on a single leaf of alfalfa, and the leaf is not injured.

Except for the first appearance, the caterpillars of the green leaf-miner are not so numerous as the caterpillars of the last year. As many as five of these tiny caterpillars have been counted on a single leaf of alfalfa, and the leaf is not injured.

Except for the first appearance, the caterpillars of the green leaf-miner are not so numerous as the caterpillars of the last year. As many as five of these tiny caterpillars have been counted on a single leaf of alfalfa, and the leaf is not injured.

For the treatment and the work in carrying out the plan during the entire period is one that will be required in the future. Sheep require the most attention in winter when the farmer has the most time to spare from farm operations. There is some liability to loss from the loss of sheep and loss of money invested in implements and machinery than in any branch of dairying. The trip to market will carry the farmer's wool product, and one trip will take the lambs to the car or butcher. The care of sheep is an interesting and fascinating business and can be enjoyed by the most refined. There are some important things to do, like getting up early to care for lambs, or shooting a neighbor's dog that is in mischief. But every deal seems to be a drawback.

We are given in the opinion that the most profitable use to which the sheep should be put is in the wool industry. It doesn't require great capital to start and no previous buildings are a disadvantage. They should be kept in lots of three to five hundred, divided into smaller blocks for convenience and the benefit of the sheep. One man with an assistant three months in the spring will feed and care for one thousand sheep if buildings are fairly well arranged and pasture ranges are well fenced.

One man alone will take care of five hundred sheep and have considerable time to devote to some other work. Farms a few miles from the railroad that will provide forage for five hundred sheep, both summer and winter, can be bought for a very low price and all that is required to start and succeed in the business is a little capital, and knowl- edge of the sheep business and a supply of Yankee pluck and staying qualities. No richly patented section of the South mill. F. Hubbard M. D. and South Wiedemann will be at their on Lake Kewar in August. (May Moses, the miller, closes at the mill Aug. 1. He has made friends while here and leaves the best wishes of all.

The hay crop in this town and the farmers have a small success as they go into the field to harvest potatoes.

Need of Sorted Monies.
A little time back the treasury authorities told us the due way to the world, too big, so they are; they collect more dirt, grease and muck than they ought to. There was some talk about cutting down their size, but nothing was said against keeping them all one size. Yet, why should a one-dollar bill be as big as a two or two as big as a five, or a five as big as a ten? In many countries the smaller the denomination the smaller the "format." In these countries bank clerks do not have to spend time sorting out bills; the bills sort themselves out. Now there is so much change for error or cheating in making change when the size of the bill indicates its value.

Another point. This country needs a reform in its minor coinage. As daily life tends to shake down to the European basis the calculations of domestic finance tend to cut things finer and finer.
The nickel and the dime no longer suffice. We need a coin between the two, as well as one between the cent and nickel. Car fares will not always be 5 cents. Many a cup of coffee is worth more than 5 cents without being worth 10. Perhaps only the non-existence of the proper coin postpones the arrival of the 8-cent coin. We need the 3-cent piece to tip the bootblack.

In some of the Italian towns coins worth a fifth of a cent are in circulation. The English plan of a cent advance—penny, twopenny, threepenny—is admirable in practice. While we have not yet reached the European level, we seem headed that way, and a timely revision of our smaller coinage would doubtless be a great advantage to the many—the increasing many—in limited circumstances. —Bangor News.

A New Pest at Medford, Mass.

The latest moth pest may yet be the worst. Although the smallest as an individual, he bids fair to become the biggest in numbers and the most dangerous in his depredations. He is a minor and works inside the leaves.
The caterpillar in question is from 1.8 to 3.16 of an inch long, a little flat, translucent creature of a yellowish green or darker color, that eats his way between the upper and lower epidermis for a portion of the leaf. What he devours is the parenchyma or soft pulp of the leaf. Wherever he works his traces are visible in the rapidly spreading brown spots on the green leaf which gradually curls up as the life is sucked or eaten out of it. As many as 100 of these insects will feed on a single leaf, which goes to show the plentifulness of the insect.

The oak shrubs seem to be the first infested. Then the pest spreads up into the trees, working his way toward the top. He seems to have a special fondness for red and white oaks, but walnut and linden trees have also been found infested.
As the worm is inside of the leaf it can readily be appreciated why the arsenate of lead that is sprayed on the outside of the leaves apparently has no effect on him. This fact also explains his impregnable position so far as the birds and various other parasites are concerned. The insect is a "minor" and works all the time below the surface.

Splitting open the brown spotted leaf, you will find half a dozen or several scores of the tiny caterpillars under the thin upper skin. Just now the caterpillars are mostly full grown, a large portion of them are pupating and a few have transformed into flying millers. In two months the cycle from miller to miller has been completed.
Except for his flat appearance, his width being four or five times his thickness and one-fifth of his length, he looks like the rattler of a microscopic rattlesnake. There are 11 of these articles or rattles with a sharp little head at one end and tail at the other. As the caterpillar matures he seems to grow darker. When in the pupa state he is something like the color of iron rust or a little redder. This pupa is encased in a small film of white silk like the finest waxed paper which is attached to the inside of the heavier under skin of the leaf. This white film or cocoon is circular in form and about one-quarter inch in diameter.

In the same leaf this week may be seen a large number of crawling caterpillars, also pupae in all stages of development, and some where the pupae are fast developing. Some of the youngest caterpillars are almost as colorless as small shrimp. Minute spots, apparently of black excrement, are scattered about on the lower thickness of the leaf.

Bed Room Curtains of Mesh.

Charming bedroom curtains in Colonial effect that can be made at home are of mesh. They are made with a hem about an inch in width along the two sides and across the bottom, or fine linen tape, half an inch in width can be sewed on the under side just within a narrower hem and made into a simple design at the top.
These curtains should hang next the pane, while for the inside hangings across the top of the window casing and down each side of a group of windows figured English chintz may be used.

The longer strips reach just about two inches below the sill and are only a width of the material, while the valance across the top which is plaited on rings in scant box plates, is about 14 inches long when finished, and extends across the longer pieces at the sides of the window.

Bad Policy.
The derailing of trains, the burning of freight cars, are not properly attributable to the organization of trainmen in conflict with the managers of the Grand Trunk railway. Nevertheless such demonstrations should be prevented by the labor authorities which are conducting the affair.

Very likely, such outrages upon public rights are perpetrated by unwise and malevolent sympathizers with strikers; but in the public mind they are naturally associated with the purposes of the organization itself. This is unfortunate. It should not only be frowned upon but squelched by every force in the control of the trainmen.

Interference by the constituted authorities in such cases to exert injury to the travelling and shipping public is not only wise but imperative. There is no room for mob law here. —Boston Post.

Sheep for Abandoned Farms.
Hardly a day passes without having our attention called to some way to the many advantages that would accrue to the farming interests of New England by having more sheep kept, and we never look upon a flock of sheep without feeling that the owner is doing a good deal in keeping sheep upon his farm. There are other advantages in keeping sheep beside the cash that comes in from the sale of lambs and wool, and other ways to keep sheep besides that which allows them to run at all summer, driving to the barn after the snow has fallen such as have run the gauntlet of dogs and foxes and not over-honest residents of poverty-stricken localities. The keeping of sheep at a profit requires as close attention and intelligent management as any branch of husbandry, and when that is given no bushy branch is better. It is the neglect of this care and attention, causing discouraging results, that has led people to abandon the business in many instances.

The deterioration of New England pastures is a source of discouragement to many farmers and the absence of sheep is responsible for this condition to a considerable extent. Many pastures can be found that cannot carry one-half the stock that was easily supported upon the same area twenty-five years ago.

This is partly due to the constant cropping, but in many instances is due to the weeds and bushes that have come in and appropriated the space that should be occupied by grass. The weeds are not simply the brakes, hardhack and mullein that everybody knows and notices, but scores of smaller plants that make acceptable feed for sheep and horses. The sheep will not only utilize as feed the weeds that are rejected but by eating them give the grasses better chance.

Another advantage of sheep over other stock is in the lengthening of the pasture season and shortening the feeding season at the barn. If sheep are taken up during cold storms they will get to pasture nearly a month earlier than cows and remain out a full month later in the fall. They may not eat grain during a portion of this extended period, but it makes a marked difference in the fodder eaten. The sheep will be more healthy for this treatment and the work in caring for them during the extra period is less than would be required in the barn.

Sheep receive the most attention in winter, when the farmer has the most time to spare from farm operations. There is less liability to loss from disease or injury and less money invested in implements and machinery than in any branch of dairying. One trip to the barn will carry out the grain, produce, and one trip will take the lambs to the car or butcher. The care of sheep is an interesting and fascinating business and can be enjoyed by the most refined. There are some unpleasant things to be said about the sheep, but for care for lambs, or shooting a neighbor's dog that is in mischief, but every business has its drawbacks.

We are firm in the opinion that the most profitable use to which the abandoned farms of New England can be put is to intelligent sheep industry. It doesn't require great capital to start, and expensive buildings are a disadvantage. They should be kept in lots of three to five hundred, divided into smaller flocks for convenience and the benefit of the sheep. One man with an assistant three months in the spring will feed and care for one thousand sheep if buildings are fairly well arranged and pasture reasonably well fenced.

One man alone will take care of five hundred sheep and have considerable time to devote to some other work. Farms a few miles from the railroad that will provide forage for five hundred sheep, both summer and winter, can be bought for a very low price and all that is required to start and succeed in the business is a little capital, and knowledge of the sheep business and a supply of Yankee pluck and staying qualities. No richly painted section of the South or West offers better inducements, all things considered, for engaging in sheep industry to the extent we have named than the hills and valleys of New England, and such business would increase, rather than diminish, the productive capacity of the farm. We would like to see the business tried and the result made public.

Putting Money In Clothes

A Clearance sale is a good place to lay in supplies. Putting your money into the clothes we are offering now at special prices is just as good a place as you can find for it. The difference between present prices and what the clothes sell for regularly is a bigger rate of interest than you can get in other ways. Even if you are stocked up pretty well it will pay you to add a summer weight suit to your wardrobe. The amount you will have to pay is very small compared to the months of satisfaction you'll get out of the clothes. We are able to fit your taste in fabrics and style; the sooner you come the easier this will be.

Work on State House.

Work is going on apace on the extension to Maine's State House and it looks now as if the job would be finished by the first of next December, according to the contract. It is now possible to inspect the type of construction being followed, observe the material used and get a first-class idea of the manner in which the various departments will be cared for.

In the north wing will be located the new house of representatives, while the senate, council chamber and executive department will be located in the south wing. The new house will be larger and differently arranged than the old one. The members will be seated in a half circle, each row of seats slightly raised above that in front. The arrangement of the floor of the house will be similar to that adopted in the construction of modern theatres, so as to get the best results.

An artistic rail of grille work will separate the members from the public thereby making it possible to keep the floor clear. Between this rail and the back of the hall will be a space to accommodate between 300 and 400 persons. The house gallery is at the rear and it will have room for about 300 persons. Its seats will be well raised so that those in the rear will have a clear view of the entire floor of the house.

While the speaker's desk will be between two of the end windows of the wing, the trouble of having the face of a window will be obviated by leading the glass. By means of the large windows at either side of the hall and a great skylight on top it will be seldom necessary to resort to artificial illumination during the morning session.

The arrangement of the senate chamber is similar to that of the house, except that it is smaller. The new library will be especially fine. It will be light and large enough, it is believed, to care for all its needs for the next 100 years. The state treasurer and auditor will be given more room because the part of the building now occupied by the pension department and the department of agriculture will be divided between them.

Two features of the new building are prominent. First, any one who visits the new state house will have to work hard to get lost therein. In the old building one could not get out of the rotunda and find his way back without a guide. There is not a blind alley, stairway or entrance in the new capitol.

Person standing at the north end of a floor can see through to the southern end of that floor. On each floor there will be but two corridors. One of these will run north and south, and the other east and west.

The other feature is that not a room will be under ground. This will be accomplished by digging away a part of the hill upon which the old building stood. It will be an important and welcome change.

Among the new rooms will be one for the use of a state museum. This will adjoin the fish and game department and in it will be kept the various trophies of that department, as well as others which may become the property of the state.

EAST STONEHAM. Mrs. J. Bartlett is visiting her sister, Mrs. Harrington, in Portland.

Fernando McAllister and son Merton are helping E. S. Bartlett do his haying. Dr. T. Angie and wife and friend of Boston are at their camp for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart R. Reed of New York are at their camp at the head of Lake Virginia.

Farmers are getting along in a hurry with their haying, with the excellent weather. Some have got nearly done.

Rats and skunks are having a feast in this neighborhood. They dug a hole under the chicken pen of Mrs. Charles Chaplin and killed 18 in one night. They visited Frank McAllister and killed five chickens.

Killing Weeds by Syringing. Farmers are undoubtedly spending more time at this season of the year trying to control weeds than on all their other chores put together. Statistics show that the damage done by weeds to the crops of the farmers in this country amounts to more than their taxes. Notwithstanding these facts, the weeds have been a great blessing to agriculture in that they first compelled the farmer to cultivate his crops thus conserving moisture and making the plant food more available.

Even though weeds have done a lot of good, our proposition at present is to get rid of as many as possible. For truck and hoed crops, thorough cultivation is undoubtedly the best method, but for lawns, fence corners, roadsides, grain crops and mowings, some other method must be pursued. Syringing with sulphate of iron, a by-product in the manufacture of steel, has solved this last problem.

BETHEL.

A. M. Edwards, the New England manager of the Macmillan Company, died in Boston, the 21st, after an operation performed a week ago. Mr. Edwards was born in Bethel, Jan. 12, 1837, graduated from Bowdoin college in the class of 1860, and was later a teacher and superintendent of schools in Lewiston, and Pittsfield, Mass. For the last sixteen years he has been connected with the school book publishing trade. Mr. Edwards was the son of the late Gen. Clark Edwards. Helen Estelle Biebee of Bethel, and Bertram E. Packard of Litchfield, were married Wednesday evening last week at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. D. G. Lovejoy. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. C. B. Bingham of the M. E. church.

The wedding was the 50th wedding anniversary of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Churchill of West Paris. The house was prettily decorated. After the ceremony an informal reception was held. Ice cream and cake were served by Sue Plasted, a girlhood friend of the bride. Another friend, Maude Moore of Newfield, presided at the organ. The bride was gown in a white directors satin, with lace yoke and over dress of chiffon. Her bouquet was lilies of the valley.

The gifts were many and varied. Mrs. Packard is a graduate of Gould Academy '04 and of the Curry School of Expression '06. She was for three years instructor of elocution and literature at Parsonfield Seminary, North Parsonfield. Mr. Packard is son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Packard of Litchfield, and is a graduate of Bates College 1900; also of the U. of M. Law School. He has been a teacher at the Leavitt Institute, and the past year was district superintendent of the schools of Camden and Thomaston.

He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1860, was at one time Supt. of Schools in Lewiston, was well known as an educator and made for himself a good record in that field of labor. He was a man of strict integrity, strong business capacity, a genial friend, a kind hearted neighbor and citizen, and one who will be greatly missed among his associates and friends, as well as in the family circle. He leaves a wife and one son, who graduated from Bowdoin last June. He leaves also three brothers and one sister. Two brothers are in the West and the third, resided in Bethel.

The Fall Web Worm.

From present appearances there is no doubt but that the nests of the fall web worm will be much more abundant the coming season than they were last year. In fact, in all sections that we have visited during the past week all the fruit trees, the willow bushes, many of the elms and even the alder bushes are covered with this conspicuous web. It proved to be a serious pest with us last year, especially in the young orchards. All who are interested in the future of any movement for better fruit should at once lend a hand in getting rid of this pest as far as possible. Spraying at this time will do no good; it is too late.

The recommendation given from the Department to spray during the first week in July, if followed out, would have completely destroyed the young caterpillars as soon as they have hatched from the eggs and thus prevented the unsightly nests that are sure to follow. The caterpillars are concealed under the tent of their own construction, and as they feed they rapidly push this tent before them so that they are secure from any intrusion either by birds (and few of these will touch them) or the spraying material that might be applied.

One should go over the trees thoroughly and remove by the ordinary pruning shears all twigs that are infested. In some cases the eggs are just hatching and the leaves are being curled by the young caterpillars for the web, so that a careful inspection is needed to secure them all. In other cases the webs have already extended over large limbs. We saw one tree that had eight separate nests quite well developed. It is a well-known fact that if these are neglected they may destroy whole orchards, especially of young trees, as some can vouch for to their sorrow.

Do not wait, even though the duties of an active haying campaign are on at this time, as a few days serious damage may have been done to young trees. Be sure to remove these pests and burn them, as no other method of destruction would be as satisfactory. If left on the ground many of the caterpillars will return to the trees and form new webs. This is a serious matter and should be attended to at once.

E. F. HITCHINGS, State Entomologist.

Chit-Chats.

Bemis is one of the places in Maine where the thermometer never registers very high in summer, but it "soars down" pretty low in winter. A few years ago the clerk at Bemis walked out onto the piazza one very still morning and made a mental note of the fact that the thermometer registered just 40 below zero. After he returned to the office he casually remarked that it wasn't very cold, to which all present agreed. But a little later another man went out and consulted the thermometer and immediately reported the result. All present began to retch, shiver and shudder and put on more wood. Before he went to work, several of the men decided not to go to the mill that day because it was "too cold."

It was at Bemis Camps that a guest overheard something about "deer milk," and remarked that that was very fond of cow's milk, and didn't object to goat's milk, but he had never before been where deer were so plentiful that they were milked.

The passing of the caribou was a great loss to the state. Many people claim they were killed off, but guides tell me that the last year they were in Maine (about 15 years ago, I believe) every band of caribou was headed north and never was a one to be seen going south during that season. What caused it probably will always remain a mystery. I do not believe the deer did it. There is plenty of feed in Maine for moose, deer and caribou, and while feed may give out in a certain location in one year, the next year the animals change location, and the feed grows again.

The Young Horse.

The young horse, like the boy, must have training for good habits, if he is to be of good service in the future. A horseman, talking on the subject of training young horses, says that a halter must be used when first handling them, and that they can't break at it as hard afterward to cure them of it. The proper time to begin halter breaking is when the foal is a few days old, and only a good strong halter should be used.

If the youngster succeeds in breaking the halter even a time or two when first handled, the habit will be formed, and may last a lifetime. The breaking of halters and bridles soon becomes expensive. The halter breaking horse can never be left while hitched to a rig, and when not hitched to a rig the owner never knows where he is to find the animal. By using a strong halter, one that cannot be broken, no horse need ever form this very disagreeable fault.

The second thing which the young horse should never know is that there is a load in the world which he cannot pull. Horses are made, not born, and overloading at first is almost sure to make a balky of a horse. This habit, like halter breaking, is hard to remedy; and everyone owning a balky horse knows the disadvantage connected with it.

Too much care cannot be taken to never overload a young horse. Never load at first heavier than the horse with which the youngster is hitched can pull, and this horse should always be a reliable puller. Young horses, I think, should be broken double before being hitched singly. After a horse is thoroughly broken double, there is seldom any trouble to break him to drive singly. All young horses should be broken to drive singly.

To let a young horse know what is wanted of him is absolutely necessary. When this is once known the youngster will usually fulfill the requirements. After the young horse is thoroughly halter broken the harness should be put upon him and be driven around four or six times a day for two or three days before being hitched with a good, level-headed fast-walking horse, one that can start quickly and go fast if necessary.

THERE are three different kinds of Ginger Ale:

Domestic, Imported and CLICQUOT CLUB

Those who have tried all three kinds, prefer Clicquot Club, because it lacks the burning sting in other ginger ales, caused by the red pepper, and because its quality and taste are undeniably superior.

Clicquot Club Ginger Ale

The best fresh ginger and the best sugar (not saccharine) are used in Clicquot Club, with a dash of pure citric fruit flavor. The water (Clicquot Spring water) is the best ginger ale water in the world; and the carbonating and bottling is perfect.

Clicquot Club Ginger Ale is non-astringent.

Other Clicquot beverages: BIRCH BEER, ROOT BEER, SASSAPARILLA, BLOOD ORANGE, and LEMON SODA.

A Good Fishing Day.

Last Friday was a great fishing day in our community. Not having fair weather for day making, a majority of our people took their look on lake and stream. Raymond Webber captured thirty-eight trout and your correspondent an equal number, all beauties. Several others got good strings and some good catches of pickerel were made. But the honors of the day were due Loring Roberts, who succeeded in capturing twenty-seven trout in a stream so small that the pollywogs turn bottom upwards to keep the sun from burning their backs, and the trout go out on the grass to get a little exercise.
